Elvic Kongolo - "Time's Up"

The Norwegian-Congolese artist from Sortland turns the pressure of supporting family into a disco-funk release for the dancefloor.

SORTLAND, NORWAY – Elvic Kongolo releases his new single "Time's Up" on 16 October 2026 through Elvic Records, distributed by The Orchard.

The song begins with the responsibility of showing up for family when plans do not work out. Its verses hold worry about the future and the wish to provide more. The chorus opens a different space, where music and dancing offer a moment of relief, energy and connection.

The line "I need the DJ to save my soul" links those two sides. It asks for a break without pretending that responsibility has disappeared. Across 2:35, a 70s/80s disco-funk pulse meets Afropop and contemporary dance-pop.

Kongolo wrote and produced the track. He is a Norwegian-Congolese artist, composer and producer based in Sortland in Northern Norway, singing in English, French and Norwegian. His work brings together African rhythms, funk, soul and Nordic minimalism, often exploring hope, identity and community. Previous releases include "Tequila", "Let them be", "Beautiful monday", "A Change Is Gonna Come" and "Our Story".
